Why match positions to the index returns by month and not by day? Daily would give the council a smoother line.

Span (S)
Build agent

The fund statements arrive once a month and the benchmark is defined month end to month end. A daily match would set a fund value from 30 September against an index from 8 October, and the gap would look like performance. Monthly keeps both sides on the same date.

Leo Tan (LT)
Data engineer

Agreed. Keep monthly.

- Portfolio against benchmark, monthly: portfolio return, benchmark return, difference

- ✓ Report-ready table has one business owner: Mei Chen
- ✓ Raw copies reused, nothing stored twice
- ✓ Runs after the month-end statements arrive

I checked the joins with Span: monthly is right because the statements and the benchmark are both month end. Ready to try on a copy.

What verification covers

The numbers in the run are the numbers in the files: 7 of 7 figures match and each one is traced. It does not confirm the business definitions, such as the benchmark mix. That is Mei's review as the business owner.

☑ I compared the control totals and traced each figure to its source. Mark this run as verified.

All three weights differ from version 1. The run used version 2, which is still being agreed and is not approved for reporting.

Mei Chen
Analyst · business owner

Flagging one issue: the private markets sleeve is 40% here. Our signed benchmark is version 1, with the sleeve at 30%. Version 2 is still with Raj and can't be used for September. Please rebuild on the signed definition. The portfolio side looks right.

Changed the cleaned benchmark weights table to read the approved version for each month. September uses version 1. From October the benchmark will be refused until version 2 is signed, and you will see it as a case in Action.
